

Last Photograph

The look on his face isn't acceptance; isn't fear; neither a need to be among his children, gathered, nor a desire to be alone.

It's more like disbelief through which the sharp intelligence is like light through glass, unable to come to a stop.